

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An optical connector includes a supporting block, a pair of guide pins protruding from the supporting block for mating with a connecting component, and an array of active optical components recessed into the supporting block so that a void is present between the active optical components and optic fibers carried by the connecting component. A transparent filler material the void and provides a light path between the active optical components and the optic fibers.